Anuman Interactive and Chillingo announce the adaptation of the "Dracula" application for the iPhone and iPod Touch

Montreuil, March 4th 2010. Anuman Interactive has assigned to Chillingo the adaptation of the "Dracula" title for the iPhone and iPod Touch.

Following the acquisition of the Microïds portfolios and titles (end of 2009), Anuman Interactive has announced, in collaboration with the English language publisher Chillingo, the arrival of the Dracula title on Apple media.

As such, the "Dracula: The Path of the Dragon - Part 1" application, adapted from the title of the same name about which there was a lot of hype in the press, casts the player in the role of Father Arno Moriani in a game of adventure and investigation. "Dracula: The Path of the Dragon - Part 1" was developed by the French studio Tetraedge Games. The story is divided into three parts for worldwide distribution by Chillingo.

"With such strong titles as Dracula, Egypt and Amerzone from the Microïds portfolio, our objective is to reach the wider public on a multitude of platforms on an international level. Given Chillingo's know-how and experience in the publishing, development and distribution of games on mobile devices, it made sense to us to assign the publication of the "Dracula" title on the iPhone and iPod Touch to them", explains Stéphane Longeard, Director General of Anuman Interactive.

At this time, only the "Dracula: The Path of the Dragon – Part 1" application is available in the worldwide AppStore. The 2nd and 3rd parts of the story will be available soon. "Return to Mysterious Island 1" and "Return to Mysterious Island 2" have also been available online since the middle of 2009.
